

The Whole World Is Watching

Monday MARCH 7
6:30-8:00 PM

How does the media shape justice? In partnership with the Allentown Art Museum's exhibit This Light of Ours: Activist Photographers of the Civil Rights Movement, the Library will invite Aram G. Goudsouzian, author of Down to the Crossroads: Civil Rights, Black Power and the Meredith March against Fear, to speak about how the media informs society about social justice issues. The art museum's exhibit runs through May 15. The author will participate in a panel discussion at the Library to examine how the media, primarily television and newspapers, were used to record the turbulence of the 1960s.

Dr. Robert H. Mayer, Moravian College Professor of Education and Director of the Center for the Advancement of Teaching; Dr. Imaani El Burk, Lehigh University Department of Journalism; Dr. Ted Morgan, Lehigh University Political Science Department will also serve as panelists with moderator Sholomo Ben Levy, NCC History Professor in the Humanities and Social Sciences Department. The panelists will also explore how the use of social media (Facebook, YouTube, etc.) has contributed to influencing the racial climate of the 21st century. Free and open to the public. REGISTRATION is required.
